CALL FOR DIVERSITY IN DIET

There is need for deploying broad range of crops as strategic assets to reduce malnutrition, says expert

CITY BUREAU
Hyderabad

India had adequate food grains and good amount of it was also exported. However, equitable distribution of right amount of food among people was not happening which had become a major cause for malnutrition, stunted growth and anemia, scientists and researchers from diverse fields said on Sunday.

There was heavy reliance on a narrow diversity of crops that put the future of food and nutrition security at risk. There were 250 lakh globally identified plant species out of which through the history, humans used close to 7,000 crops for food. However, at present, only three major food crops rice, wheat and maize provide 60 per cent of the world's food energy intake.

"There is a definite need to give due importance to traditional and indigenous food. The Ministry is collaborating with top organisations to improve status of malnutrition and anemia."

RAJESH KUMAR,
Joint Secretary

Taking part in the international conference on 'Aligning Food Systems for Healthy Diets and Improved Nutrition', at the National Institute of Nutrition here, Tutwiler said countries were not paying attention in having diversity in producing food grains but instead focussing on cash crops such as rice, maize and wheat. Joint Secretary, Ministry of Women and Child Development (MWCD), Rajesh Kumar, said India was working on dietary diversification. "As an apex body, the Ministry is collaborating with top organisations to improve status of malnutrition, stunting and anemia in the country," he said.

CAUTION SOUNDED AGAINST RUT

The Ministry of Women and Child Development has cautioned policymakers, scientists and researchers that body mass index (BMI) may not be a magic wand to treat children affected by Severe Acute Malnutrition (SAM). "Some experts and voluntary organisations are pushing for the introduction of peanut butter for SAM children in India. In a country like India, solutions should be unique," said Joint Secretary, MWCD, Rajesh Kumar. BMI, which is commonly used in Africa, is an average body nutrition food that is often used as a medical intervention to improve nutrition intake of children with severe acute malnutrition. "There are no studies to quantify the advantages of BMI among Indian children. A broader perspective to address malnutrition must be taken instead," Rajesh Kumar said.

Indigenous food making a comeback

In the last decade or so, indigenous food products with high nutritive value have vanished from the Indian diet. However, reliance on just a narrow group of food products to meet the nutritional requirements of a population has started to change in India with people realising the importance of imbuing local delicacies and introducing diversity to their eating habits.

As part of its efforts to encourage indigenous food products, NIN held a special exhibition on Sunday in which tribal produce from far-flung regions such as Karnataka and Brahmapur in Odisha, Gadchiroli in Maharashtra, bedone in Madhya Pradesh, Visakhapatnam and Anaku Valley of Andhra Pradesh were showcased.

"There is no denying the fact that consumers like fresh produce. The challenge, however, is to ensure availability of the unique local produce," said T Ravi of Sohaja Akaram, a farmer's co-operative that operates five organic food outlets in Hyderabad.

Farmer's cooperatives and voluntary organisations from across India, who are working to bring back indigenous food products, narrated their present-day challenges. "There was a time when everyone forgot about Mahua in Madhya Pradesh. However, these days, the fruit is back in demand and it has helped farmers like us," said Sukhram Bhagel, a farmer from Dewar district in Madhya Pradesh. The local farmers from MP collaborated with Samaj Pragati-Sahayog, a voluntary organisation, to revive the dry lands in the region and take up organic farming of indigenous food products such as 'Kumpua', an edible plant that grows in fields during monsoons, in addition to cash crops.

The exhibition also attracted participation of farmer-turned-entrepreneurs, who experimented with relatively new food products like pickles, ready-made kheer mix and even papad made up of mud-moons.

"We collaborated with Directorate of Mushroom Research in Solapur to come-out with food-products based on mushrooms. People took time to understand the product but after a year, we are getting several orders," said T Laxmi, a farmer and owner of Lakshmi Organics in Visakhapatnam.

Street plays drive home message to voters

I & B Ministry taking initiative in coordination with GHMC

PRAKASH PECHETI
Hyderabad

Street plays seeking to sensitize urban voters on the importance of exercising their franchise, have been attracting good crowds in different parts of the city.

"Vote Is Our Weapon", a street play organised by Regional Outreach Bureau, Ministry of Information and Broadcasting, has people flocking around and enjoying the fare that comes with messages such as ethical voting and also offer information on voting process.

The initiative taken up in coordination with Greater Hyderabad Municipal Corporation (GHMC) and the services of registered art troupes in the I & B Ministry and so far, have staged street plays at KBR Park, Lumbini Park, Mantra College and Shri Reddy Engineering College.

Kalambari Kiran, a senior Tollywood artist who witnessed the presentation at KBR Park on Sunday, appreciated the concept that highlights the social responsibility and importance of voting. "I am also planning to organise similar street plays to further sensitize people with a slogan —

44 'Vote Is Our Weapon', a street play organised by Ministry of Information and Broadcasting receives good response

"Vote Nannamathana, Vote Ni Annamathana (I believe in vote, I don't sell it)," he said.

Nitya Lakshmi, a resident of Indira Nagar, Jubilee Hills, said the plays would certainly help impact the voting behavior of urban citizens. "They are effective in addressing issues and artistic people on how voters are bribed before voting and other tricks involved in wooing voters," she said.

Troupes of Jina Palat, Yakubnagar, Ogga Kathala, Papperty, Pale Sathula, Kollatlu and other street plays are planning to organise similar events across Telangana.

T V K Reddy, Additional Director General, Press Information Bureau, said street plays would be organised at locations identified by the GHMC across the city till December 3. "The programmes are primarily aimed at first-time voters, students, and upper-class residents," he added.
